Slices - better support for PNG files Fundy Designer 4. Demo version 1.Q: Change functions behaviour with '' I understand that we can create functions with inheritance and if we want to have the parent function as built-in, we have to place it first: `int foo() { return (int)0; } int main() { return foo(); }` I was wondering how to change the behaviour of a function in this case and if there's an easy way of doing that. For example, I would want foo to return a pointer to the first element in the array passed to the function, regardless of how deep the array is. Example of what I would want to do: `int x[5]; int* foo(int x[]) { return (x+0); } int main() { return foo(x); }` I'm aware of this: `int foo(int x[], int i) { return x[i]; } int main() { return foo(x, 5); }` which works, but we have to pass another argument. I'm also aware of this: `int* foo(int x[]) { return x[0]; } int main() { return foo(x); }` which doesn't work because x has to be a pointer. Note: All these functions must return a pointer to the first element. The constructors won't work since none of them return an int*. I'm also aware of this: `int main() { int x[5] = { 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 }; return x[0]; }` but as long as we have to copy all the elements in the array, we still have to pass that array to the function, so that won't work either, unless we can make the assignment inside the function: `int main() { int *y = new int[5];`
